To Whom It May Concern:

Partners In Leadership recently conducted a one-half day workshop in our Toronto office. The subject was "Accountability" and material from The Oz Principle was used. The session was interactive, with concepts well presented. The facilitator was professional and friendly during the presentation.

Although formal comments were not requested from participants, unsolicited comments such as: "the only training session I have attended where the facilitator clearly knew their subject. The facilitator could lead us through the material without reference to notes" and "Very dynamic session – facilitator kept us involved" were received.

Specific comments regarding the content of the presentation were provided directly to the facilitator the day following the workshop. Since this presentation was one of the first within our organization, the facilitator used this feedback to immediately adjust the content to avoid duplication with a previous training session. Such responsiveness is a credit to Partners In Leadership.

We look forward to having the second part of the workshop presented in November.

Sincerely,
